

Maniac Mansion

STOP! We said STOP! Before you jump right in and start playing Maniac Mansion on your NES, you'll need to read the notes on this bulletin board. Each note is a hint (of sorts!) that may or may not apply to the game.

Some are obvious, and some are, well so subtle, that you'll groan when the hint comes into play (no pun!). So hang up this handy bulletin board close to your NES, plug in your game cartridge and get set for the wacky world of Maniac Mansion.

If you've enjoyed playing Maniac Mansion, you'll want to play other Jaleco games on your NES. Look for Bases Loaded II: Second Season, Astyanax and Pinball Quest. If you own a Game Boy, look for Bases Loaded.

Watch for these new NES and Game Boy games later this year: War On Wheels, Metal Mech, The Last Ninja and In Your Face.

EDNA DEAREST: People
keep breaking into my house.
Last time they even stole the light bulbs. I am getting sick of it, but can't afford a burglar alarm. What can I do?

—Ripped-Off in Raleigh

DEAR RIPPED-OFF: I'll
bet you are doing something dumb like leaving your key under the doormat. This is stupid. Hide the key some place where a burglar won't find it. Stick it behind a loose piece of linoleum, or hang it from the ceiling fan! A burglar will never think to look for the key inside the house.

Teen Surfer Gets a Shock

Reveals Winning Lotto
Numbers

Local teenager Jeff Woodie,
known to his friends as "Surfer Dude," had a shocking experience at the pool last week. Jeff zapped himself by dropping his portable
radio into the shallow water
where he was standing.

The jolt was minor, but friends
reported that Jeff was momentarily transformed. "He rattled off three numbers. And two of them were winners in this week's lotto!" said Jeff's pal Syd. "We thought the other number might mean something too," Syd continued, "but it just turned out to be the high score on one of the arcade games on the boardwalk.
That's weird, but it probably doesn't mean anything."

Jeff doesn't remember talking about any numbers, but he enjoyed the experience. "It was a rush," said Jeff, "but my radio's shot."

I Was Kidnapped by the Meteor Police!

"They Took My Baby!"
Cries Distraught Mom

By Emma Mae Neadrop

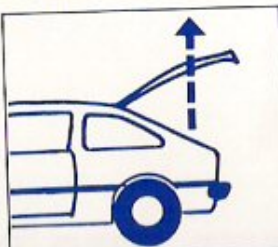

"Oh my God, that's no airplane," I screamed in my mind as the weird ball of flashing lights landed on the hood of my 1974 Toyota.

My reeling brain could only think how the thing looked like a great big vitamin pill with something like people inside. My lips moved as I read the words printed where "A-1 vitamin" ought to be: "M-E-T-E-O-R P-O-L-I-C-E"!!!

As I shook off my panic I grabbed for my baby, but too late! The slimy little creeps had him halfway out the hatchback! "Don't worry Mom, I'll be back," I thought I heard my little Myron shout, "and maybe I won't be purple any more!"

I've known Myron was special ever since that day four years ago (or was it five?) when I found him glowing in the back yard. He was like a tiny purple bratwurst then, and so cute! But I should have known right then that little Myron wasn't like other children. I should have known that he was going to have a weird life.

"Now when the other kids ask me where their special brother has gone, I just tell them to 'watch the skies.' Little Myron hasn't done anything wrong, and I know someday he'll be returned to us!"

Mysterious Plane Crash in Bermuda Triangle

Piercing, Glass-Breaking Noise Blamed

A small twin-engine plane carrying what authorities described as "an agricultural cargo" from Central America crashed yesterday in the infamous Bermuda Triangle.

From his hospital bed in Miami, pilot Bruce Beaver told this reporter that he heard a piercing, high-pitched noise moments before the crash. "The noise started, then the instrument panel just sort of blew up and the windshield shattered," said Beaver. "All that glass breaking—it was just like one of those Ella Fitzgerald commercials."

The luxury cruise ship Bodacious Banana happened to be directly under the plane's flight path at the time. Passengers reported the high-pitched noise and breaking glass on the ship. Many of the porthole windows and all the chandeliers in the dining room were broken.

"I'm simply shattered," moaned the Banana's social director Ilona Glass.

EDNA DEAREST: I have a decorating problem I cannot solve. I am so depressed. When I put my big new sofa in the living room I can't open the front door. What should I do?

—Depressed Decorator in Des Moines

DEAR DECORATOR: We are often plagued by unsightly and inconvenient doors. The solution is simple—just paint over it and no one will know it's there. Then your sofa will look fine.

EDNA DEAREST: My husband Chuck (not his real name) is kind, generous, and well-groomed. There's only one problem—he's a wimp. I mean a real ectomorph. I find this disgusting. What can I do?

—Wife of Wimp

DEAR WIFE: That's easy. Get him a weight machine. A couple of good pumps and he'll be a new man.
